The city is partnering up with the Museum of the City of New York for Women's History Month to highlight the roles of prominent women activists from the 20th century to present day. The partnership will allow MCNY to highlight its current exhibit, Beyond Suffrage: A Century of New York Women in Politics.

Starting today, the city's LinkNYC kiosks will feature images of notable women from MCNY's exhibit, across all five boroughs. The partnership will last through the end of the month, and highlight the roles of women both well known and others whose work has not attracted mainstream attention prior to the exhibit.

Just some of the women that will be featured in this digital exhibit include Verina Morton Jones, a physician and leader of the Equal Suffrage League, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, one of the leading figures of the early women’s suffrage movement, and Mabel Lee, one of the lesser known activists of the movement.

“The perfect match between Link’s platform and our content will bring the story of women’s activism in New York to life in unprecedented ways and make the inspiring history of Beyond Suffrage accessible for even more New Yorkers, tourists, and visitors,” said the president of the MCNY, Whitney Donhauser, in a statement.
